MODERN DAY COWBOY - Extreme Cowboy Racer Vaudry Edge travels the South for Competitions

By Blake Alsup, Daily Journal (October 2022)

TUPELO • Vaudry Edge spends his days selling horse tack and raising colts on his farm in Tupelo. But several weekends per year, he's navigating obstacles in extreme cowboy races across the southern United States on his horse, Willie John.

Edge, 68, started racing in 2007 when a friend put on an independent event in Missouri. Despite having never raced before, he had plenty of experience from working cattle in pastures all his life.

After that first event, he joined the EXCA and began taking part in races across the southern United States.

"It's just kind of fun to do and helps your horse," Edge said. "It teaches your horse a lot of stuff and is pretty exciting to do."

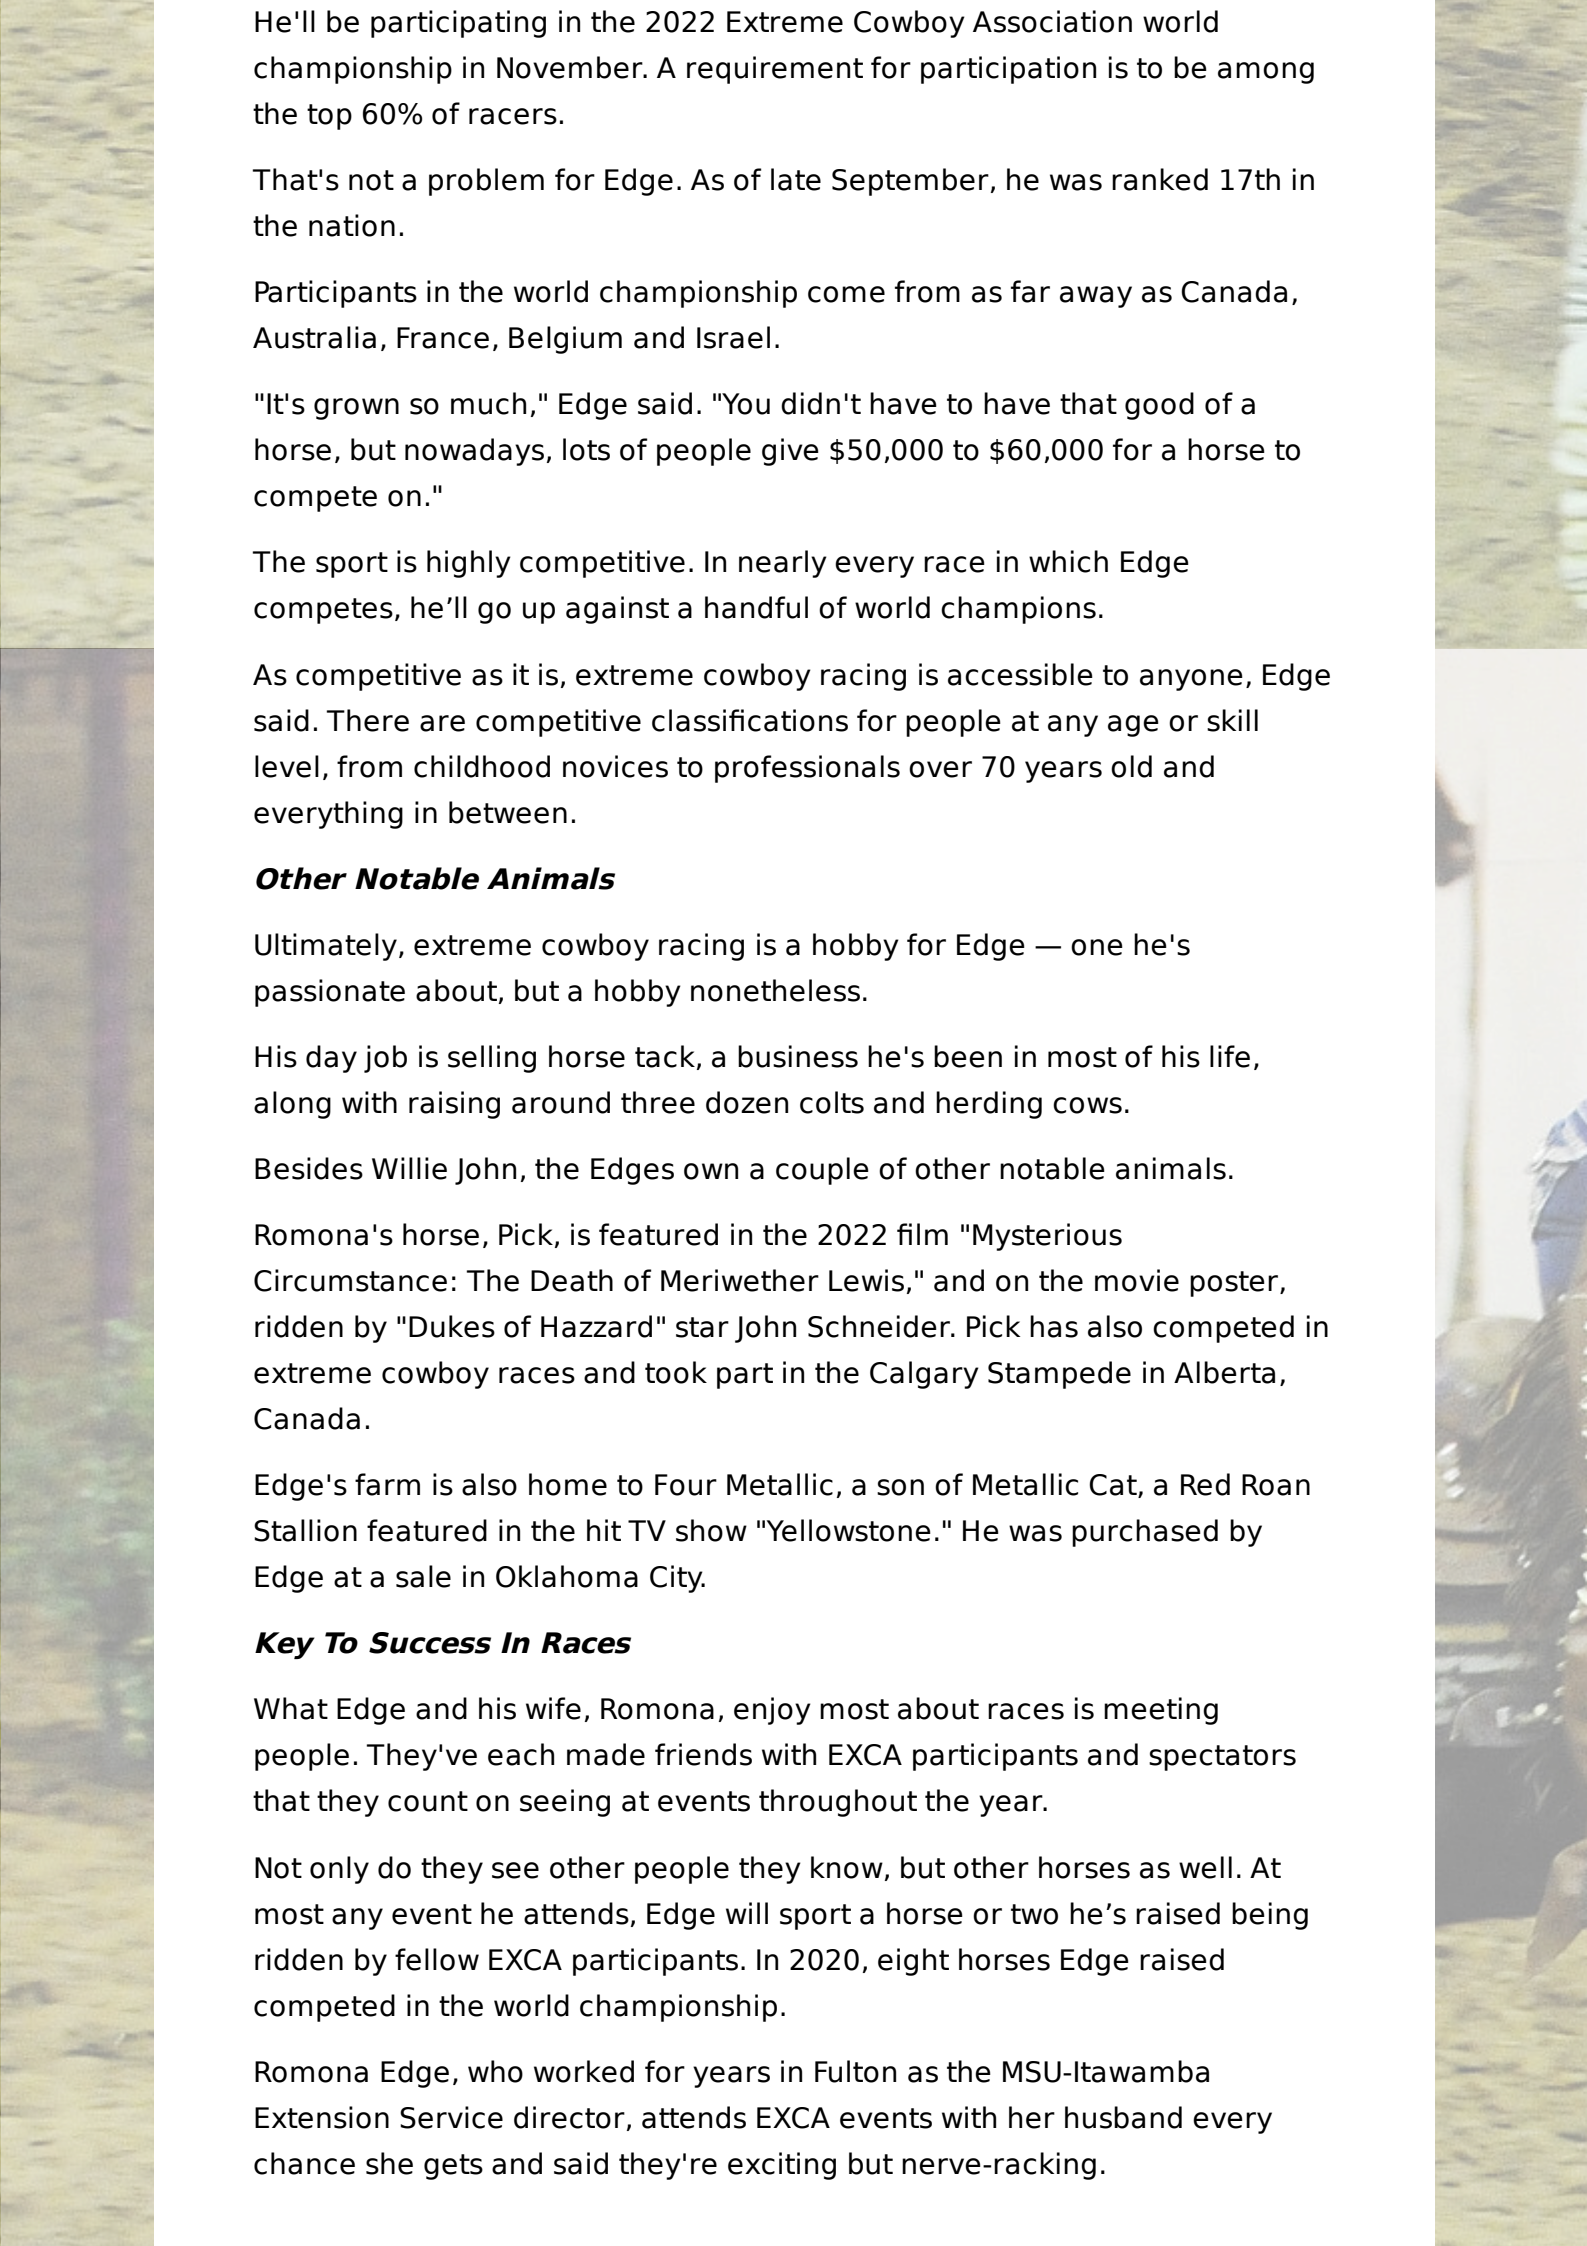

A Highly Competitive Sport

Edge and Willie John — an American Quarter Horse named for Willie Nelson and Perry Johns, the man who loaned Edge the stud that sired the horse — complete obstacles ranging from crossing narrow bridges and jumping barrels to crossing water and roping a steer.

Obstacles are timed and judged, with participants receiving points for each.

To train for these events, Edge has set up his own obstacles on his farm. Nothing compares to the adrenaline and excitement of an actual race, but it's a great way to prepare.

Edge typically competes in five or six events per year. He has previously raced in Florida, Georgia, North Carolina, Alabama, Kentucky and Texas.

He'll be participating in the 2022 Extreme Cowboy Association world championship in November. A requirement for participation is to be among the top 60% of racers.

That's not a problem for Edge. As of late September, he was ranked 17th in the nation.

Participants in the world championship come from as far away as Canada, Australia, France, Belgium and Israel.

"It's grown so much," Edge said. "You didn't have to have that good of a horse, but nowadays, lots of people give $50,000 to $60,000 for a horse to compete on."

The sport is highly competitive. In nearly every race in which Edge competes, he'll go up against a handful of world champions.

As competitive as it is, extreme cowboy racing is accessible to anyone, Edge said. There are competitive classifications for people at any age or skill level, from childhood novices to professionals over 70 years old and everything in between.

Other Notable Animals

Ultimately, extreme cowboy racing is a hobby for Edge — one he's passionate about, but a hobby nonetheless.

His day job is selling horse tack, a business he's been in most of his life, along with raising around three dozen colts and herding cows.

Besides Willie John, the Edges own a couple of other notable animals.

Romona's horse, Pick, is featured in the 2022 film "Mysterious Circumstance: The Death of Meriwether Lewis," and on the movie poster, ridden by "Dukes of Hazzard" star John Schneider. Pick has also competed in extreme cowboy races and took part in the Calgary Stampede in Alberta, Canada.

Edge's farm is also home to Four Metallic, a son of Metallic Cat, a Red Roan Stallion featured in the hit TV show "Yellowstone." He was purchased by Edge at a sale in Oklahoma City.

Key To Success In Races

What Edge and his wife, Romona, enjoy most about races is meeting people. They've each made friends with EXCA participants and spectators that they count on seeing at events throughout the year.

Not only do they see other people they know, but other horses as well. At most any event he attends, Edge will sport a horse or two he's raised being ridden by fellow EXCA participants. In 2020, eight horses Edge raised competed in the world championship.

Romona Edge, who worked for years in Fulton as the MSU-Itawamba Extension Service director, attends EXCA events with her husband every chance she gets and said they're exciting but nerve-racking.

"It makes me nervous because I want him to do well," Romona Edge said, adding with a smile, "Which he does."

She's not wrong; Vaudry Edge has earned first place accolades at several events. He's even a member of the EXCA Hall of Fame. He was inducted in 2020 and received a commemorative belt buckle.

For Edge, the key to being successful in EXCA races is simple:

"You've just got to do all your obstacles correctly and have a good time," he said.
